

monster Find Better.
#WakeUpToFindBetter with Monster.com
Know More >>
Better Access | Better Connections | Better Jobs

- BREAKING NEWS
- PROPERTY
- LIFE & STYLE
- DINING
- FINANCE
- MORE !
- NEWS SERVICE
- MONTHLY FOCUS
- VIDEO

PR NEWSWIRE

A World First: Celebrity Photographer Dominic Khoo Retires from Art to Go into Finance

by ADMIN on Dec 13, 2013 - 12:28 pm

No Comments

Like 0 | +1 0 | Tweet 1 | Share | Submit

SINGAPORE, Dec. 13, 2013 /PRNewswire/ — Nominated against his idol Annie Leibovitz — famed for her pregnant photograph of Demi Moore — for Asia Pacific Photographer of the Year, Dominic Khoo ended his career as a celebrity photographer in 2012. After he became Singapore's most expensive living artist, he decided to concentrate fully on his other profession: investment-grade watches.

Khoo and his friends had made money from a decade of collecting and studying watches before deciding that "It's About Time" to start The Watch Fund. It is a world first investment-structure that allows investors to actually wear top-level watches and sell them later for a profit.

At USD$16,000,000 assets under management in six months, The Watch Fund has garnered many supporters. "It can only exist now with this concept, connections, database and execution," says Khoo. The idea of a watch fund is not original — a watch fund was started in Luxembourg a few years ago but in that system investors only held onto a statement of investment and were not allowed to wear the watches. "We need to have a 'fun' fund," says Khoo. "Money making is not enough, fun must co-exist. If I can't wear what I spent money on, then what's the point? We wanted to create a whole new different kind of investment system."

The Watch Fund partners make money during win-win situations for all involved parties. Stakeholders gain access to extreme limited editions and enjoy unheard-of price advantages. The fund even offers provenance pieces — timepieces that used to be worn by royalty and historical figures, capturing great moments of human history on the wrist.

So how does The Watch Fund work? The concept can be described with the scenario of a car fund. Let's say that you want to drive and own a super car. You invest USD$250,000 in the car fund and they only take a 5% fee, giving you immediately a car to the lines of a Ferrari or a Bentley. You speed the car away. You attend the great events. You put the top down and let the wind through your hair. The person next to you kisses you on the lips. However, one day in the future you get sick of the car. The car fund would buy it back for more than USD$275,000. You can choose to take the cash profit or reinvest it to get an even more exclusive car. Of course, such a car fund does not exist.

But the exact same concept works for The Watch Fund — and it works well. Some investors have already experienced a 15% gain in just three months. Investors are told to expect a minimum return of 20% at the end of three years daily wear — whilst also the possibility of a 400% return in a few years. "For men that understand watches and finance — this is a no-brainer. Some even say it's too good to be true!" says certified watch expert Khoo.

Since its foundation in February 2013, The Watch Fund has become a serious player in the international investment scene. The hook is simple: Typical millionaires would end up buying 15-20 watches in their lifetime whether it is for themselves as individuals, for business associates or for loved ones. Considering that 99.9% of watches bought at retail prices would end up losing the buyer money — why not make a portion of this investment-grade? Particular watches have an annual increment of up to 15%. Khoo and his partners are connected to the highest levels of the industry and use their unparalleled network to gain access to these pieces that sometimes even money cannot buy.

Dominic Khoo is a veteran in the watch industry, having trained with the world's biggest watch auction house Antiquorum (Geneva, 1974). Subsequently, he worked in brand management for Girard-Perregaux and wrote as a journalist for world-class watch magazines. Khoo recently started up the watch auction arm for Spink (previously owned by Christie's), the world's oldest auction house (London, 1866).

During his 14-year experience of watch collecting, Khoo spoke on watches for several companies like The Hour Glass, UBS and Hermes. He was also given a royal warrant for watch-related and photography services by HRH Prince Hakeem Jefri Bolkhiah of Brunei Darussalam. "One truth I know to exist: Guys have nothing else wearable to buy except for watches. If you know you're going to spend the money sooner or later — you better do it early," Khoo says referring to Warren Buffett's regret that at eleven years old — he had started investing too late. "With the price of skilled labour only going to go up in the watch industry — top-level watches will always rarer and more expensive", he continues.

Contrary to public belief, Dominic Khoo was the only South-East Asian watch expert even before he started photography. The passionate watch collector was given a camera on his 28th birthday to take pictures of watches. He continued to take shots of celebrities wearing watches and eventually became a famous celebrity photographer. During his seven years of photography, he has photographed more than 150 international celebrities including actors like Nicolas Cage and Tony Leung, soccer star Zinedine Zidane and the Dalai Lama. Khoo built up his career as a certified watch expert at the same time, but it was more a silent passion contrary to the big spotlights and the red carpets. "I think it's much easier to believe a 28-year-old is a famous photographer than a trained watch expert," he admits laughing.

Dominic Khoo founded The Watch Fund and his art gallery 28th Fevrier with serial entrepreneur Simon Poon at their black-and-white space, the "Oozi Clubhouse" near Singapore's famous Orchard Road. The Watch Fund is based in Singapore and Hong Kong. More information on http://www.thewatchfund.com.

monster Find Better.
#WakeUpToFindBetter with Monster.com
Know More >>
Better Access | Better Connections | Better Jobs

Find us on Facebook
Biz Daily
803 people like Biz Daily.

Biz Daily
Predict the STI at the end of 2013 and win Jaillance French sparkling wine to usher in the new year!

DAILY POPULAR

- Stock Picks (292)
- ListCos (220)
- Businesses Looking to Hire Candidates with Mixed Skills in Finance, Tech and Marketing in 2014 (143)
- Food-loving Singapore Spurs Restaurant's Corporate Earnings (90)
- Global Headlines (62)
- STI Constituents to Remain Unchanged (49)
- Dining - Jamie's Italian - Some Hits, Some Misses (47)